Holden, county seal deal on airport land

by Cindy Glasson

Acquisition of land to situate a new airport in Hot Springs County has come to a conclusion after months of talks between the county and landowner Joe Holden.

A deal was reached between Holden and the county on Wednesday, Dec. 7, according to County Attorney Jerry Williams.

The more than 400 acres of property on Owl Creek Road west of Thermopolis includes the Holden ranch as well as a parcel of land held privately by Holden.

Compensation to the landowner amounts to just over $1.1 million. Part of that compensation package includes monies to be used by Holden to move any buildings he wishes from the property.

To determine the value for the acquisition, two appraisals were performed to determine a before and after value of the ranch as a whole. The difference between the two appraisals then became the purchase price.

The methodology for the appraisals was very specific and mandated by Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) rules.

Another component of the payment to Holden was what is called an "administrative settlement," which is essentially an extra enticement to agree to a negotiated settlement. That amount represents the price that a condemnation suit would ultimately cost.

By foregoing that process, Holden was able to benefit rather than his and the county's attorneys. If the county had filed suit and begun the condemnation process, the payment would have become a wasted asset used to pay the costs of the suit.

Eminent domain avoided

It was thought earlier last week that negotiations with the landowner had come to a standstill and the possibility of eminent domain was looming. A late-evening phone call from Holden to the commissioners put negotiations back on track.

The commissioners did not want to pursue eminent domain proceedings; however, FAA regulations demanded eminent domain verbiage would be included in all contracts.

"I am gratified that we were able to achieve a negotiated settlement with Mr. Holden for his property," said Commission chairman John Lumley. "While it has taken quite some time, it has consistently been the wish of the commissioners that the Holdens be properly compensated for the land, regardless of the time involved and it took time to accomplish this goal.

"I am extremely appreciative that we were able to arrive at this settlement without any further proceedings."

"I am very satisfied that we were able to come to a negotiated settlement that I think is fair to both the county and Mr. Holden," commissioner Brad Basse said. "I do wish we had been able to sit down across the table from each other many months ago and maybe save considerable monies that were expended on attorneys and other consultants with the end result being the same.

"This is one more milestone in a process that started many years ago. It will be exciting to watch the airport begin to take shape over the next several years," Basse said. "All of our work to this point has resulted in killing a lot of trees, but now we can look forward to seeing a work product that actually serves the citizens of Hot Springs County and the whole nation as part of the national transportation system."

Chamber considers joining GLF in bringing folk festival to town

by J.D. Stetson

Members of the Greater Learning Foundation approached the Thermopolis-Hot Springs Chamber of Commerce board of directors last Thursday to see if the chamber would be interested in a joint venture to bring a statewide folk festival to Thermopolis sometime in the fall.

Sue Blakey, a representative from the foundation, explained the event is too large for the foundation to operate alone and it would provide a good opportunity for the two organizations to work together.

The organization plans to have the event possibly in the fall at Hot Springs State Park and it would likely last two days.

The festival would involve two to three master craftspeople, of which Thermopolis has many living nearby, working at the same time providing demonstrations while period-specific foods would be available.

Blakey said there are at least three other communities in the state such as Laramie, Dubois and Sheridan also in planning stages to have a festival. She said the window available for Thermopolis to stake a claim to the folk festival is limited to 2012.

The festival would be a statewide event, not just a community event, Blakey stressed. Many of the craftspeople would likely need to be juried by the Wyoming Arts Council and the event organizers.

The chamber board discussed what the chamber's role would be for the festival. Blakey said the foundation is very strong in the planning of

Golden Age Club elects board members

Golden Age Friends of Senior Citizens, Inc., known as the Golden Age Club, elected five members to serve two-year terms at its annual meeting Nov. 10.

From the field of 10 candidates, the five elected were Mike Kelley, Virginia Odde, Anna Ireland, Wally Van Antwerp and Louise Odde. However, after it was noted at a later date Ireland's term does not expire until 2012, the person with the next highest number of votes – Donna Lossner – was asked to serve. She agreed.

Kelley, Virginia and Louise

Odde, and Van Antwerp will join Ireland, Larry Burgess, Lillie Mueller and Beverly Moore, who are currently serving on the Golden Age board.

Outgoing directors are Jean Stanhope, Jerry Buehler and Nancy Haynes.

events, but they will need much more manpower and volunteers to actually run the festival.

The board also inquired whether it would be able to have an event in tandem with the festival, such as a microbrew festival.

Blakey said the folk festival would be obligated to provide period-specific foods and the addition of a "brewfest" would likely provide an asset to the overall event.

The chamber board did not make a decision during the meeting. Board president Donna Nally said the board would discuss whether they want to be involved and notify the foundation when they have a decision.

3-on-3 Basketball

The chamber board discussed a new sponsorship system for the Thermopolis 3-on-3 Basketball Tournament.

Many of the board members had several changes they would like to make to the system and they were not voted upon during the meeting. Nally told the board to provide suggested changes to executive director Michelle Lue prior to the board's January meeting.

The 3-on-3 Tournament will take place May 5-6 in the downtown area. The chamber had previously discussed setting a threshold for how much net revenue it would need to make from the event to justify whether to bring back the tournament in future years.

Lue said she had crunched numbers from previous tournaments but she was unable to find realistic figures indicative of the actual net revenue the tournament has brought in over the years.

Lue reported she had paid the first of two $6,250 payments to World Events pursuant to the multi-year contract with the organization to provide equipment and host the event.

The chamber is in its last year of the contract and the board will need to make a decision after the tournament on whether they will bring the event back.

After last year's tournament, the chamber lost about $200 after all expenses were paid; however, Lue stressed the amount was not indicative of overall performance because the chamber was not allowed to seek additional sponsorships from members because of its tiered member dues system.

Some of the board members said they would like to see the $12,500 the chamber pays to World Events go toward other events that have potential to benefit chamber members such as a fly fishing tournament, folk festival or brewfest.

The board did not set a threshold percentage of net revenue for the event during the meeting, but Nally did say it would have to make a decision after the 2012 tournament on whether it will seek a new host, buy equipment and host the tournament in-house or no longer have the event.

Chamber changes

During the board meeting, the board made Lue the official executive director for the chamber. Lue has operated the chamber during the past year as an interim executive director.

The chamber board also accepted the resignation of board member Veva Blakesley, who cited personal reasons for leaving the board.

The board also indicated it would vote in January to bring three new member-elected board members onto the board and they will appoint one new board member to fill a seat originally held by Sheriff Lou Falgoust.
