Rodeo wrangles up thousands of fans

Spectators come from as far as Germany for PRCA event

by Drew Foster

Mark Ellis was already thinking about next year's Thermopolis Cowboy Rendezvous PRCA Rodeo before the dust settled at the Hot Springs County Fairgrounds arena Saturday night.

Ellis deemed this year's rodeo a resounding success - it attracted about 3,000 attendees and 135 contestants over both days. Rodeo fans from as far away as Germany took in the action from the grandstands, he said.

"We had ticket sales from New Jersey, North Carolina, Texas, Iowa," Ellis said. "We're pulling tourists in, as well as people from the Big Horn Basin and all over Wyoming.'

A PayPal feature added to the rodeo's website in recent years has boosted ticket sales among out-ofarea rodeo fans, Ellis said.

"I might be a little partial, but I think it was a success," he said.

Still, that doesn't mean Ellis and other rodeo organizers aren't focused on improving the experience. He and other coordinators are now listening to comments, suggestions and recommendations from vendors, participants and others involved in the Thermop rodeo. He wants to keep improving and continue attracting hig-name competitors. "Our whole attitude is that we're putting on a show," Ellis said.

This year's rodeo coincided with the Reno Rodeo in Nevada and the College National Finals Rodeo in Casper, both big draws in the rodeo world that lured competitors away from Thermop. But top talents such as professional bull riders Clayton Savage and Bobby Welsh and world champion saddle bronc rider Chet Johnson still attended this year's Rendezvous Rodeo. Four National Finals Rodeo competitors also found their way into the lineup, as well as a few collegiate stars that made their way over from Casper.

Local bull rider Justin Ellis also competed.

Nearly $28,000 in prize money was awarded.

Lots of input at State Parks master plan meeting

by Joe Sova

Bringing water back to flow over the terraces in Hot Springs State Park, concessionaires' leases, the railroad underpass at one entry into the state park and developing a nature and discovery center on the state property were among issues of concern expressed by people attending the public meeting hosted by Wyoming State Parks and Cultural Resources on Monday evening at the Hot Springs County Museum and Cultural Center.

This was the second in a series of monthly meetings, which are being scheduled in Thermopolis by State Parks and Cultural Resources Director Milward Simpson. He was accompanied at Monday's meeting by Domenic Bravo, Todd Thibodeau and Mabel Jones from the state office. Bravo is the division's facilitator. Thibodeau is the planning and grants manager while Jones serves as senior planner. State Parks and Cultural Resources Commissioner Don Schmalz of Cody was also in attendance.

HSSP Superintendent Kevin Skates and Assistant Superintendent John Fish were also part of the contingent and answered some of the questions posed by meeting attendees. The purpose of Monday's meeting was to share information about the state's master plan for Hot Springs State Park and hear what community members feel are the strengths of the park and what areas need improvement.

Simpson turned the presentation of the master plan over to Thibodeau and Jones. While Thibodeau has been associated with State Parks and Cultural Resources for two decades, Jones has been involved for nearly 10 years. A former teacher at the Hamilton Dome School years ago, she has a strong natural $resources\ background-currently$ involved in the Boysen State Park master plan.

"This is a road map of what's going to happen in Hot Springs State Park," Thibodeau said early in his part of the presentation, indicating the current master plan is about 30 years old and certainly in need of updating. "Visitation (to HSSP) has changed....This is a vision of where we want to be," he said. "You can influence how we manage the park.

Thibodeau explained the HSSP master plan as systematic, collaborative and comprehensive. "We should be able to defend our actions," he said.

He said the State Parks office would bring in an independent firm right after the Fourth of July. The firm would evaluate existing conditions in HSSP, gathering information in order to develop alternatives – and how to implement the master plan. Thibodeau said the planning team would

Relay For Life Friday night in Hot Springs State Park

Things will be rockin' in Hot Springs State Park on Friday night as 2014 Relay For Life kicks off to "Finish the Fight."

The event has a Duck Dynasty theme this year and will start with a survivor and caregiver dinner at 6 p.m. at the new Smoking Waters Shelter across from the Big Spring, followed by their opening lap at 6:30 p.m.

The remainder of the relay will take place in the area of the new shelter rather than at the Kiwanis Washakie Shelter as it has in the past.

A luminaria ceremony will be held at dusk in remembrance of those who have lost their fight with cancer or are continuing their battle with the disease. Luminaria are available from any Relay For Life team member for $5 each or three for $10. If you have any questions or would like to purchase luminaria, contact Kim Enis at

Throughout the weekend, attendees will tour historic and scenic areas in Hot Springs County and finish their time here with a writing workshop on Sunday afternoon.

consist of State Parks, a consultant, steering committee and the public. Once the steering committee is put together, it will hold some of its meetings in Thermop.

He turned the presentation over to the Jones, who outlined the steps in the planning process. They are: 1. Identify issues, management concerns, opportunities and challenges. 2. Establish planning and decision-making criteria. 3. Evaluate existing conditions of $recreation\, and\, natural\, and\, cultural$ resources. 4. Develop alternatives. 5. Evaluate consequences, benefits and effects of alternatives. 6. Select the preferred alternative. 7. Final master plan.

Jones indicated it would take about 18 months to reach the final HSSP Master Plan from the project start-up date. "The first six months there is a lot of interaction with stakeholders and the steering committee," she said. "We want to get on the same page of where we want the park to go in the future.'

A handout at the meeting showed the timeline for the HSSP Master Plan. The project start-up date is Sept. 1 of this year. Other notable dates: April 14, 2015 – Summary of Existing Conditions and Decision Criteria; July 13, 2015 - Draft Alternatives; Oct. 11, 2015 - Present Preferred Alternative: and Jan. 14, 2016 - Final Master Plan. There are three 30-day public comment periods built in during 2015-April 15-May 15, July 12-Aug. 12 and Oct. 11-Nov. 11. The agency review period is set for Dec. 10, 2015 to Jan. 15, 2016.

Jones spoke about the importance of HSSP visitor demographics and opinion, plus the flora, fauna and landscape features. Hydrology comes into the picture in a valuable way was said to be a concern.

There was a brief discussion of state leases in HSSP and Skates reported there were currently 19 leases in force.

Attendees of the meeting were divided into small groups – each providing input on: what is going well in the local state park; what needs improved; where the future opportunities are; and the constraints or challenges pertaining to Wyoming's most-used state park. The input would provide a framework for State Parks to develop the goals and scope of work in the RFP and would also be used in steps 1 to 3 of the master planning process.

After the meeting, Simpson indicated the next public meeting in Thermop would be held around the middle of July. The date will The subject of heavy use of be announced when the meeting streets in HSSP arose and traffic is scheduled.
